

In these fights, the winner is determined from the start. It's not a boxing match with a surprise finish, the underdog toppling the champion. Try to make peace and you're devoured alive; fight back and the police take you away, accusing you of starting the fight. And God knows what comes after that ...

Based on the death-in-custody of Oury Jalloh and the political movement that arose from the case, The Most Unsatisfied Town takes an intimate look at a community transformed by an unspeakable act of violence. This work-in-progress presentation will be followed by a conversation open to the public with artists and special guests.

Written by:

Amy Evans

Amy Evans began her career in theatre ten years ago, developing spoken word pieces in collaboration with a number of Berlin-based artists and musicians. Her first play, Achidi J's Final Hours, was based on the true story of Mareame N'Deye Sarr who was killed by German police in Aschaffenburg in July 2001. She is currently a resident fellow at the ICI.

Performed by:

Martha Fessehazion, Michael Ojake and David Wurawa

Special Guest:

Eddie Bruce-Jones

is a Visiting Lecturer in Public International Law at King's College London School of Law, where he teaches postgraduate courses in international law and anti-discrimination law.

Bruce-Jones is a member of The Oury Jalloh Independent Investigative Commission and LGBTI Resource Contact for The Southern Refugee Legal Aid Network. He is a doctoral researcher at the Institute for European Ethnology at Humboldt University in Berlin. Among his published work is the article "Race, Space, and the Nation State: Racial Recognition and the Prospects of Substantive Equality under Anti-Discrimination Law in France and Germany." Bruce-Jones' principal research includes human rights law, refugee law, comparative equality law, legal theory, prison policy, and legal anthropology.

Please register by sending an email to amy.evans@ici-berlin.org

Probekühne

Amy Evans The Most Unsatisfied Town

Wednesday

9 December 2009

7 pm

in English